UGA MEDICAL SPANISH

A unique study abroad experience in Peru

The UGA Medical Maymester in Peru is a four-week experience designed for students of Spanish who are also preparing for future careers in healthcare. The objective of the Medical Maymester in Peru is to prepare aspiring healthcare professionals to meet the challenge of a rapidly growing Hispanic population in the United States. With over fifty million Hispanics now living in the U.S., the current medical system faces an urgent need for bilingual medical professionals: doctors, nurses, pharmacists, social workers, and public health specialists. Language skills and cultural sensitivity are integral to providing quality care to this growing demographic, and students who acquire these skills as part of their academic program will benefit not only professionally and financially but also personally from the wide range of opportunities available to bilingual professionals in the global market.

6 credit hours:
♦ Span 4003: Medical Spanish (3 hours)
♦ Span 4190: Internship in Spanish (3 hours)

Program Cost of $4050 includes:

Tentative dates: 24 May - 24 June 2012
The Franklin College of Arts & Sciences, in partnership with the Terry College of Business, sponsors three study abroad sites in Spain: Valencia, Cádiz, and Seville, with the common goal of globalizing the UGA undergraduate degree. Each program offers students a unique opportunity to develop a firm background in Spanish and strong preparation for course work required of Spanish and Romance Languages majors or minors.

Each program’s courses are held at modern university facilities within the host city and are equipped with computer labs for student use. Classes are taught by experienced UGA and host university faculty.

Program Fees include:
- Full room and board on-site
- Madrid excursion upon arrival
- Weekend excursion
- International Student ID Card
- Study abroad insurance
- Option to purchase air ticket at group rate. Airport transfers in Madrid for group travel.

observe how exchange rates, marketing institutions, property rights, government regulations, and production, marketing, management, and environmental management options. Students will gain an understanding of the markets for Georgia products in the global economy.

Swahili Studies

SWAH 3020
Swahili Studies
Instructor: Dr. Lioba Moshi

The course will explore aspects of the Swahili language and culture, its origins, civilization, and expansion from the coastal states to the hinterlands. The class and the readings will be in English, but students who have taken Swahili for two or more semesters will be encouraged to take advantage of being in the target language to strengthen their aural and oral skills. Students will be expected to interview (in English), speakers of Swahili on specific topics that will be assigned in class. The results of the interviews will be reported in a term paper.

Natural History

AFST/Biol 3450
Natural History of Africa
Instructor: Dr. Sandra Whitney

During this course, students will acquire an understanding of basic ecology and conservation issues in Tanzania. We will identify relationships between plants and animals from the arid savannah to the tropical coast; recognize the many ways living things are adapted to survive in their environment and discuss issues threatening conservation of some endangered species and habitats of sub-Saharan Africa today. Additionally, students learn to observe and record natural history experiences in a scientific field journal.

International Agribusiness and Environmental Management

AAEC/HACE/AFST/ADSC 3911
International Agribusiness and Environmental Management
Instructor: Dr. Jack Houston

This course will provide cross-cultural experiences and insight into the global agribusiness production, marketing, management, and environmental management options. Students will observe how exchange rates, marketing institutions, property rights, government regulations, and cultural practices impact international agribusiness transactions. Students will be analyzing how market information guides production and consumption decisions in other countries and study price premiums for specialty crop. Also, students will gain an understanding of the markets for Georgia products in the global economy.

Intro to Africa and Religion

AFST/GEOG/SOCI/CMLT/HIST/ANTH 2100
Introduction to Africa
Instructor: Dr. Ibigbolade Aderibigbe

This course is multi-disciplinary and provides students with an introduction to the study of Africa using Tanzania as a microcosm of the continent. We will survey the geology, pre-history, natural history, modern history, cultures and politics of Africa as we travel across the country experiencing many of these topics as they are illustrated in Tanzania. We will draw comparisons with many other parts of Africa that contrast with our own first-hand experiences. This course fulfills one of the requirements for either the Certificate or Minor in African Studies.

Anthropology

ANTH 1102/2120H
Introduction to Anthropology
Instructor: Dr. Sandra Whitney

This course will study variation in human biology and culture from the earliest beginnings to the present, including a visit to the “Cradle of mankind” at Oldupai Gorge. We will observe various primates in their natural habitats. We will study the relationships between human biology, culture and the environment and we will compare contemporary cultural differences, both within and beyond Africa. This course fulfills one of the Core Curriculum requirements for social science.

Service Learning

AFST 4900
Service Learning Moshi/Ukerewe
Instructor:

Students will participate with local agencies to provide a service to the community, designed with those agencies and UGA faculty, to meet the needs of that community, and to enhance the academic curriculum of the student. There will be structured time to study and reflect on the basic issues involved. Non-traditional format: student will be working in the community, and studying with UGA faculty and local agency officials to both understand the issues relating to the need for their service, and to provide that service in an effective way. The work hours will be determined by the local agencies involved. Supplemental readings and discussions with both local service providers and UGA faculty will enhance the student’s experience and understanding of the issues.
